A time For Listening:

The very words 'Silent' and 'Listen' in English are anagrams! Does that not say something? When one listens, one needs to be silent.

If you are not silent, you cannot listen; if you really want to listen, you must be silent. In the decibel culture that bombards our lives, we find it not too easy to be silent.

Perhaps, we are afraid of silence. The message from our noisy world seem to be: The louder the better! We like to drown out silence with noise. It would be interesting to stop and ask what precisely are we afraid of when we attempt to drown out silence with noise. Just as we cannot see clearly what we look like when we look into a pool, unless the waters are still, so too we cannot really get to know ourselves unless we are silent. Silence is the great revelation.

It reveals God to us; even more, it reveals us to our selves. Could this possibly be one of the reasons we are afraid of silence? (Mgr. Alex Rebello)
