‘Legal and moral are two very different realities. Our Irish history tells us that very clearly. Just think of the Penal Laws, nobody questioned their legality, but practically everybody questioned their morality, No human forum, however big its majority, can square the morality circle. The direct and intentional killing of an unborn human being will be just as immoral the day after it has been ‘legalised’ as it was the day before. Nothing and nobody can change that. Human life is sacred. ‘Restricted abortion’ means crossing the line, after that we are in a new place morally and the numbers are academic.
