Thought:

There was once a teacher who, like Jesus, used to make his point by telling parables. Some people got the point and others didn't. One day a student got sick of listening to these parables and asked the teacher, 'Why don't you speak plainly and tell us what you mean?' And the teacher told the following parable; 'Truth was a man who walked the street as naked as the day he was born. Because he was naked people were scandalised by him. Truth had a lot to say but no one would have him in their home. Whenever he tried to make conversation people would turn their backs on him and tell him to cover himself up. Depressed and dejected Truth decided to leave town. On his way out Truth met Story. Now Story was beautiful woman who always dressed in the finest clothes. Everybody loved the company of Story. She was given the place of honour in every home she called into. Story saw that Truth was depressed. She asked him what was the problem and Truth told his tale of woe and dejection. For the first time someone really listened to Truth and Story was moved by his honesty and wisdom. The two fell in love and got married. Nine months later Story gave birth to a girl called Parable. Parable inherited her father's honesty and wisdom but she also inherited her mother's beauty and sense of style. Just like her mother, people loved the company of Parable. She entertained and delighted any home she went into. But she also had a lot to say and people listened for they were disarmed by her charm.
